2. What is the particular relevance of the activity to purposes and objectives the 2003 Convention and its compliance with the principles of the Convention?

The celebration of the 100th anniversary of the Deutscher Falkenorden e.V., the oldest falconry association in the world, was an important event to show people that the intangible cultural heritage of falconry is as alive as it has been in all previous years and is changing over time and has been able to evolve in every respect. We were able to show how we incorporate technical progress into our millennia-old cultural heritage, how we use our special knowledge of birds of prey, owls and nature to protect the environment, and how we preserve and develop our cultural heritage through the exchange of knowledge – both in Germany and around the world - and pass it on to the next generation. We presented our activities not only in our sport, but also in our projects for the rescue of birds of prey, rehabilitation and protection of our environment to the public, invited politicians and key people from relevant associations. In addition to the general public, the focus was also on the members of the German Bundestag. In addition, guests from all over the world were present. Each of our national associations presented one of our themes, for example hunting with birds of prey, rehabilitation of injured wild birds of prey and preparing them for their release back to the wild, breeding and release of peregrine falcons and Ural owls, protection of European white-tailed eagles and so on. Our youth group presented their activities and offered activities for children. In addition, falconers from all over Germany and the world came together to celebrate, talk and share their experiences in falconry.
